FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT FOR DECLARATORY AND INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

(Violation of Immigration and Nationality Act and Implementing Regulations, Administrative Procedure Act, Convention Against Torture, Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 and Implementing Regulations, and Due Process)

INTRODUCTION

1. Customs and Border Protection (“CBP”) facilities are legal black holes. This case challenges the federal government’s drastic change in policy to—for the first time—detain asylum seekers effectively incommunicado and in appalling conditions in those facilities throughout their asylum screening process, without any opportunity to meet in person, or even by telephone, with an attorney to obtain the assistance to which they are entitled by law.

2. Congress has mandated that asylum seekers, including those subject to “expedited removal” proceedings, have the opportunity to access and confer with counsel and third parties while they prepare for an initial screening for asylum and other protection from removal and for a review of that screening determination by an immigration judge. These screenings, known as “credible fear interviews,” are the critical first step for many asylum seekers because they determine whether these individuals and families may pursue a claim for asylum or other protection or, instead, will be summarily sent back to the countries they are fleeing.

3. Defendants’ new programs effectively deny all access to counsel and third parties, and therefore, all but guarantee that many asylum seekers will be erroneously sent back to countries where they face danger and that, as a result, some of them will be killed or endure horrific violence. This case seeks to ensure that those fleeing persecution and torture in their home countries have a fair opportunity to apply for asylum and other protection in the United States.

4. Prior to either October 7 or 8, 2019, noncitizens in expedited removal proceedings who expressed a fear of removal were transferred from CBP detention to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) detention centers before their credible fear screenings.

5. Defendants are now implementing what they have termed the Prompt Asylum Claim Review program (“PACR”) and the Humanitarian Asylum Review Process (“HARP”).¹ Under PACR, asylum seekers from countries other than Mexico who are in credible fear proceedings are kept in CBP facilities instead of being transferred to ICE detention centers. HARP applies the same policy as PACR to Mexican asylum seekers in credible fear proceedings.

6. This change, from Defendants transferring asylum seekers to ICE custody for credible fear screenings to keeping them in CBP custody, is pivotal. In ICE custody, these asylum seekers were afforded more time and opportunity to contact counsel² or prospective counsel or others to aid them in their credible fear proceedings. They could also meet with attorneys, both in person and telephonically, prior to the credible fear interview with an asylum officer and again prior to an immigration judge’s review of any negative credible fear determination.

7. CBP allows none of this to meaningfully occur for those in its custody, and CBP facilities are not set up to facilitate such access. CBP facilities do not afford in-person or telephonic access to counsel or, in fact, any meaningful communication with the outside world. CBP, unlike ICE, provides no system to locate people in its custody. Its facilities were designed for short-term detention and not for asylum seekers going through a credible fear process.

¹ Defendants have also referred to the PACR program as the Prompt Asylum Screening Review program or “PASR.”

² Individuals in expedited removal may have been able to retain counsel because they did so prior to crossing into the United States; because their family members retained counsel on their behalf; because they retained counsel while in ICE custody; or through other means.

8. Under PACR and HARP, an asylum seeker in CBP custody is given only one window of approximately 30 minutes to one hour to call family members or retained counsel, or to call prospective attorneys from a limited list provided by CBP. There is no callback number or other means by which lawyers may attempt to reach clients or prospective clients. The result is that it is functionally impossible for an asylum seeker in one of these programs to contact an attorney.

9. Even when an asylum seeker does manage to contact an attorney, PACR and HARP ensure that the asylum seeker does not have a meaningful opportunity to consult with that attorney. CBP denies attorneys physical access to its facilities, precluding all in-person meetings. CBP also does not provide for any regular telephonic access and provides no guarantee that the consultation will be confidential.

10. Even when CBP has been aware that an attorney is attempting to reach an individual prior to their interview or hearing before an immigration judge, CBP has forced that individual to proceed with their credible fear interview or hearing without any opportunity to consult with that attorney.

11. Consequently, under PACR and HARP, asylum seekers functionally have no opportunity to access counsel or prospective counsel or other individuals during their credible fear screening as mandated by Congress. Moreover, the terrible conditions of confinement in CBP facilities (known as “hieleras”—Spanish for “ice boxes”—due to their freezing temperatures) hinder asylum seekers’ ability to meaningfully participate in their credible fear proceedings.

12. Defendants have to date implemented PACR and HARP in CBP’s El Paso sector. As of November 26, 2019, 392 asylum cases had been processed through PACR. As of November 27, 2019, the government had placed at least 137 asylum seekers in HARP.

13. CBP has stated its intent to expand PACR and HARP to other parts of the border.

14. PACR and HARP systematically undermine the procedural safeguards guaranteed to those seeking asylum by rocketing asylum seekers through the credible fear process with no access to counsel. Congress provided for protections for people in credible fear proceedings in order to prevent the United States government from erroneously sending asylum seekers back to places where they face persecution, torture, and possibly death.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

15. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over this action under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 8 U.S.C. § 1252(e)(3). Jurisdiction is also proper under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1343 and 1361 and 5 U.S.C. §§ 702 and 706.

16. Venue is proper in the District of the District of Columbia under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because Defendants are officers and employees of the United States, at least one defendant resides in the district, and a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims alleged herein occurred in this district. Venue is also proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(2) because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in this district. Finally, venue is proper here because 8 U.S.C. § 1252(e)(3) requires that all § 1252(e)(3) actions be brought in this district.

PARTIES

17. Plaintiff A.R.R.D. is an asylum seeker from El Salvador who was placed in the PACR program and subsequently removed to El Salvador.

18. Plaintiff L.E.R.D. is the minor child of A.R.R.D. He is an asylum seeker from El Salvador who was placed in the PACR program and subsequently removed to El Salvador.

19. Plaintiffs A.R.R.D. and L.E.R.D. fled El Salvador after receiving numerous threats to their lives, including a traumatizing experience in which a gang member pointed a gun at L.E.R.D.'s head and demanded that A.R.R.D. pay the gang 3,000 U.S. dollars; if she did not, they said they would kill her and her baby. Under PACR, A.R.R.D. and L.E.R.D. had no meaningful opportunity to consult with counsel prior to their credible fear screening. After being removed to El Salvador, the family is living in hiding. A.R.R.D. fears for her life and the life of her child.

20. Plaintiff A.S.C.R. is an asylum seeker from El Salvador who was placed in the PACR program and subsequently removed to El Salvador. She is A.R.R.D's sister.

21. Plaintiff K.M.V. is A.S.C.R.'s husband and is an asylum seeker from El Salvador who was placed in the PACR program and subsequently removed to El Salvador.

22. Plaintiff F.B.G.C. is the minor child of A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. She is an asylum seeker from El Salvador who was placed in the PACR program and subsequently removed to El Salvador.

23. Plaintiffs A.S.C.R, K.M.V., and F.B.G.C. fled El Salvador after receiving numerous death threats from gangs, including the threat that if they did not pay 3,000 U.S. dollars to the gang, they would wind up in body bags. The family had no meaningful opportunity to consult with counsel prior to their credible fear screening. After being removed to El Salvador, the family is in hiding. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. fear for their lives.

24. Plaintiff B.G.R. is an asylum seeker from Mexico who was placed in the HARP program and subsequently removed to Mexico.

25. Plaintiff D.M.F.G. is the minor child of B.G.R. She is an asylum seeker from Mexico who was placed in the HARP program and subsequently removed to Mexico.

26. Plaintiff B.C.F.G. is the minor child of B.G.R. She is an asylum seeker from Mexico who was placed in the HARP program and subsequently removed to Mexico.

27. Plaintiff J.M.F.G. is the minor child of B.G.R. He is an asylum seeker from Mexico who was placed in the HARP program and subsequently removed to Mexico.

28. Plaintiff S.F.G. is the minor child of B.G.R. He is an asylum seeker from Mexico who was placed in the HARP program and subsequently removed to Mexico.

29. Plaintiffs B.R.G., D.M.F.G., B.C.F.G., J.M.F.G., and S.F.G. fled Michoacán, Mexico, after B.R.G.'s father was disappeared and a cartel threatened B.R.G.'s life and the lives of her children multiple times if they did not pay extortion fees. These threats included detailing where her children went to school, where the family lived, and what places they tended to frequent. During their time in HARP, B.R.G. and her children had no meaningful opportunity to consult with counsel prior to her credible fear screening. After being removed to Mexico, B.R.G. and her children are now living in a tent encampment in Ciudad Juárez and fear for their lives for as long as they remain Mexico.

30. Plaintiff Las Americas Immigrant Advocacy Center ("Las Americas") is a nonprofit organization based in El Paso, Texas that provides free and low-cost direct legal services to noncitizens, including asylum seekers, in West Texas and New Mexico. Its mission includes providing consultation and legal services to noncitizens detained by the federal government in the El Paso area, including by representing individuals through the credible fear interview process through a staff of four attorneys and three legal assistants. Las Americas has expended significant resources attempting to locate and represent individuals in the PACR and HARP programs.

31. Defendant Chad Wolf is the Acting Secretary of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security ("DHS"), an agency of the United States. Acting Secretary Wolf is ultimately responsible for the actions of DHS and its components. He is sued in his official capacity.

32. Defendant U.S. Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") is a cabinet-level department of the U.S. government. Its components include U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services ("USCIS") and CBP.

33. Defendant Kenneth T. Cuccinelli is the Acting Director of USCIS, a component of DHS. Acting Director Cuccinelli is responsible for the actions of USCIS. He is sued in his official capacity.

34. Defendant USCIS is the sub-agency of DHS that, through its asylum officers, conducts interviews of individuals placed in the expedited removal process who express fear of return to their countries of origin or an intent to apply for asylum, to determine whether they have a fear of persecution or torture that entitles them to a full immigration hearing in proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a.

35. Defendant Mark A. Morgan is the Acting Commissioner of CBP, which is responsible for, among other things, the processing and admission of individuals at ports of entry and for the apprehension and detention of individuals seeking asylum at or near the border. Acting Commissioner Morgan is sued in his official capacity.

36. Defendant Todd C. Owen is the Executive Assistant Commissioner of the Office of Field Operations (“OFO”) for CBP. OFO is responsible for the management of CBP’s operations at ports of entry. Executive Assistant Commissioner Owen is sued in his official capacity.

37. Defendant Hector A. Mancha Jr. is the CBP Director of Field Operations in El Paso. He is responsible for ensuring that CBP officers under his supervision follow the agency’s policies and procedures. He is sued in his official capacity.

38. Defendant Gloria Chavez is the El Paso Border Patrol Sector Chief. She is responsible for ensuring that Border Patrol officers under her supervision follow the agency’s policies and procedures. She is sued in her official capacity.

39. Defendant CBP is the sub-agency of DHS that is responsible for the initial processing of noncitizens who present at U.S. ports of entry without valid documentation or are apprehended at or between U.S. ports of entry.

40. Defendant William P. Barr is the Attorney General of the United States. He is ultimately responsible for the actions of the Department of Justice and its components, including the Executive Office for Immigration Review. He is sued in his official capacity.

41. Defendant U.S. Department of Justice (the “DOJ”) is a cabinet-level department of the U.S. government. DOJ is responsible for the administration of the immigration laws pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1103.

LEGAL BACKGROUND

I. U.S. Immigration Law’s Protections for Individuals Fleeing Threatened Harm

42. Under U.S. law, every noncitizen “who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States” has the right to apply for asylum. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1).

43. Individuals are eligible for asylum if they experienced past persecution or have a well-founded fear of future persecution “on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion” and if they are “unable or unwilling to return to, and . . . unable or unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of” their country of origin because of that persecution or fear. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42)(A).

44. U.S. law also protects noncitizens who are not eligible for asylum but nevertheless face potential severe harm if they are returned to their home countries. The U.S. government cannot return individuals to a country where it is more likely than not that their “life or freedom would be threatened . . . because of [their] race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.” 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3)(A) (“statutory withholding of removal”).

45. The government also cannot remove individuals to a country where they are more likely than not to be tortured. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 1208.16-1208.19 (regulations implementing the United States' obligations under the Convention Against Torture ("CAT")).

46. "Asylum seekers," as used in this complaint, refers to individuals who are seeking protection from removal to their home country based on the dangers they would face there. These individuals may be eligible for asylum, entitled to statutory withholding of removal, and/or entitled to withholding or deferral of removal pursuant to CAT.

II. The Expedited Removal System

47. Ordinarily, people whom the executive branch seeks to remove from the United States are placed in immigration removal proceedings under Section 240 of the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA") (8 U.S.C. § 1229a). In these proceedings, they have a full hearing on the merits of their case before an immigration judge. During proceedings under § 1229a, an individual generally has a meaningful opportunity to develop claims for asylum or other forms of relief.

48. Removal proceedings under § 1229a provide for multiple layers of review. Following a hearing before an immigration judge, a person can appeal to the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA"). A noncitizen who receives an adverse ruling from the BIA can then file a petition for review in a federal court of appeals.

49. In 1996, as part of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act, Congress created a highly truncated removal process called "expedited removal" for certain noncitizens who present at a port of entry or who have recently entered the country without inspection. The expedited removal process is an alternative to full immigration removal proceedings under § 1229a. People placed in expedited removal will not go through full removal proceedings unless they are taken out of the expedited removal track. Those subject to expedited removal are ordered removed by an immigration officer “without further hearing or review.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i); id. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iii)(I).

50. Since the expedited removal process lacks many of the procedural protections of full removal proceedings, Congress sought to ensure that those who may have valid claims to asylum or other protection will not be erroneously removed.

51. Consequently, individuals in expedited removal who indicate a fear of return to their country of origin, or an intent to apply for asylum, must be referred for an interview with an asylum officer. The asylum officer then makes a determination whether the person has a credible fear—that is, whether there is “a significant possibility . . . that the alien could establish eligibility for”: (1) asylum; (2) for withholding under § 1231(b)(3); and/or (3) for relief from removal under CAT. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(v); 8 C.F.R. § 1003.42(d)(1).

52. Individuals who are found to have a credible or reasonable fear that could make them eligible for protection must be taken out of expedited removal and placed into full immigration removal proceedings under § 1229a. They will accordingly have the opportunity to fully develop a case for asylum or relief from removal under the ordinary structure of immigration proceedings.

53. If the person receives a negative credible fear determination at the interview stage, the asylum officer must “provide . . . a written notice of decision” and ask whether the individual wants review of the negative determination by an immigration judge.³ 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(g)(1); id. § 1208.30(g)(2)(ii). Unless the individual affirmatively waives review by an immigration judge, the agency must provide for such review. Id. § 1208.30(g)(2)(i).

³ Immigration judges and immigration courts are under the jurisdiction of the Executive Office for Immigration Review, which is overseen and administered by Defendant Attorney General Barr.

54. If the immigration judge vacates the negative determination, the individual will then be placed into ordinary removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a, just as they would have been if the asylum officer had made a positive determination. If the immigration judge upholds the negative determination, the individual will be removed without further legal process. The immigration judge’s decision on review is administratively “final and may not be appealed.” 8 C.F.R. § 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(A).⁴

55. Consistent with Congress’s concern for preventing noncitizens’ erroneous removal to places where they may face harm, the threshold for a noncitizen to successfully establish a credible fear in expedited removal proceedings is much lower than the threshold to establish eligibility for actual asylum or entitlement to other protection in full removal proceedings. The “significant possibility” of eligibility for relief that a person must establish at a credible fear interview is a fraction of the chance of persecution or torture that they must ultimately establish to prevail.⁵

⁴ USCIS may, but need not, reconsider a negative credible fear finding that has been affirmed by an immigration judge. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(A). The immigration judge’s decision is considered by the Executive Branch not to be subject to judicial review.

⁵ Under regulatory provisions that are the subject of ongoing litigation, individuals are determined ineligible for asylum if they have transited through another country en route to the United States without first seeking asylum in that other country, absent certain exceptions. See E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Barr, 19-16487 (9th Cir.); 8 C.F.R. § 208.13(c)(4). Nevertheless, such individuals will be placed in full immigration proceedings pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1229a on a showing of a “reasonable fear” of persecution or torture during their initial screening with an asylum officer. 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(e)(5)(iii). Showing a reasonable fear of persecution or torture requires establishing a “reasonable possibility” of eligibility for relief. 8 C.F.R. § 208.31(c). This “reasonable possibility” standard is the same as the standard required for establishing “a well-founded fear of persecution” for asylum—at least as low as a one-in-ten chance. See I.N.S. v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 440 (1987); 8 C.F.R. § 208.13(b)(2)(i)(B). It therefore remains a fraction of a chance of establishing ultimate eligibility for relief, far below the 50.1% chance necessary to ultimately gain relief from removal under statutory withholding or CAT. Implementation of similar regulatory provisions that would apply to individuals who have crossed the border at a place other than a port of entry is likewise the subject of ongoing litigation and is currently preliminarily enjoined. 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(e)(5)(ii); E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 354 F. Supp. 3d 1094, 1121 (N.D. Cal. 2018); stay pending appeal denied, 932 F.3d 742, 780 (9th Cir. 2018).

56. The credible fear process is a critical phase in determining who ought to be placed in full removal proceedings under § 1229a and given the opportunity to build a full case showing that they merit asylum or other protection, rather than be issued an expedited removal order.

III. Access to Counsel in the Expedited Removal System’s Credible Fear Process

57. In furtherance of Congress’s intent to ensure that individuals in expedited removal proceedings are afforded a meaningful opportunity to seek asylum, withholding from removal, or protection under CAT, Congress has provided for access to and consultation with counsel and others prior to both the credible fear interview and the immigration judge’s review of that interview for those in expedited removal proceedings. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv) (providing that a noncitizen “may consult with a person or persons of [their] choosing prior to the interview or any review thereof”).

58. During the credible fear interview itself, federal regulation also provides for the presence of an individual consulted—which includes an attorney. 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4) (“Any person or persons with whom the alien chooses to consult may be present at the interview . . .”). The attorney or other consulted individual “may be permitted, in the discretion of the asylum officer, to present a statement at the end of the interview.” Id.

59. Further, an individual “[i]n any removal proceedings before an immigration judge” has a right to representation by counsel at no expense to the government. 8 U.S.C. § 1362. Moreover, “[a] person compelled to appear in person before an agency or representative thereof” has the right “to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel . . .” 5 U.S.C. § 555(b).

60. Fundamentally, individuals seeking asylum have a constitutionally protected interest under the Fifth Amendment in applying to the U.S. government for asylum, withholding of removal, and/or relief under CAT, and therefore are entitled to procedural due process in their proceedings on those claims. See, e.g., Haitian Refugee Ctr. v. Smith, 676 F.2d 1023, 1037-38 (5th Cir. 1982); Maldonado-Perez v. I.N.S., 865 F.2d 328, 332 (D.C. Cir. 1989). Asylum seekers also have constitutionally protected interests in avoiding persecution, torture, and death.

61. Because neither the right to apply for asylum and other protections from removal nor the right of access to counsel is an empty formality, noncitizens must have the opportunity to meaningfully effectuate them. They must have a reasonable opportunity to retain and work with counsel in their removal proceedings. And they must have a meaningful opportunity to apply for asylum and other protections from removal, consistent with the procedures established by Congress.

62. Accordingly, the government may not create obstacles to access to counsel, the cumulative effect of which is to prevent access. It also may not interfere with established attorney-client relationships. And for those in its custody, the government must put in place policies and practices that ensure these individuals may meaningfully effectuate their right to access counsel. Similarly, the government may not create numerous obstacles, the cumulative effect of which is to prevent meaningful access to the process of applying for asylum or other protections from removal.

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

I. Before PACR and HARP, Individuals Were Transferred from CBP Custody to ICE Custody for Credible Fear Proceedings in Expedited Removal, Where They Could Access Counsel.

63. People who present themselves at a port of entry without proper documentation or who are apprehended at or near the southern border are supposed to be placed in CBP custody only for initial processing and for a short period of time (less than 72 hours). CBP's National Standards on Transport, Escort, Detention, and Search ("TEDS") specify that "Detainees should generally not be held for longer than 72 hours in CBP hold rooms or holding facilities,” and “every effort must be made to hold detainees for the least amount of time required.”⁶

64. Before the implementation of the PACR and HARP programs, members of this group who were placed in expedited removal and expressed a fear of return to their country of origin were then transferred from CBP detention to an ICE detention facility for their credible fear proceedings.

65. At the ICE detention facility following transfer, these individuals had greater time and opportunity to access counsel. They could contact counsel or prospective counsel telephonically and also meet with counsel or prospective counsel in person. They also could contact family members or others by phone.

66. The credible fear interview did not occur until after a specific period of time—prior to July 2019, at least 48 hours, and starting in July 2019, at least one full calendar day—in ICE custody.⁷ This time gave individuals some opportunity to contact counsel, family members, or others and also to recuperate from their journeys.

II. PACR and HARP Now Require that Credible Fear Proceedings Be Conducted While in CBP Custody, Where Asylum Seekers Cannot Access Counsel.

67. On or after October 7, 2019, DHS and DOJ began implementing PACR—a new expedited removal program, established by written policy directives, guidelines, and procedures. Also in October 2019, subsequent to initial implementation of the PACR program, DHS and DOJ began implementing HARP, a similar expedited removal program established by written policy directives, guidelines, and procedures. PACR and HARP are the same, except that HARP applies to Mexican nationals seeking asylum in the United States while PACR applies to nationals from other countries.⁸

68. Currently, DHS and DOJ have implemented PACR and HARP as pilot programs in CBP's El Paso sector. Individuals and families whom DHS has apprehended in or near the El Paso area or who have arrived and presented at a port of entry in the El Paso area are eligible to be placed in PACR or HARP.

69. PACR and HARP drastically change the credible fear process by requiring that asylum seekers go through the entirety of their credible fear proceedings—including the credible fear interview and any review by an immigration judge—while in CBP detention, without any transfer to an ICE detention facility.

70. PACR and HARP also seek to conduct credible fear interviews within 24 hours, and any further review within 10 days.

71. CBP facilities designed for “short-term” detention. Unlike those held in ICE detention centers, individuals detained in CBP facilities have essentially no opportunity to communicate with the outside world.

72. PACR and HARP create major obstacles to asylum seekers accessing the process of applying for protection in the United States.

⁸ Although Defendants have labeled PACR and HARP as separate programs, there appears to be no meaningful difference between the two, except for the nationality of the asylum seekers subject to each program.

III. PACR and HARP Effectively Deny Those in Credible Fear Proceedings Meaningful Access to Counsel.

73. PACR and HARP's policy change to mandate that the credible fear process occur entirely while an individual is detained in CBP facilities, not ICE detention facilities, effectively denies asylum seekers the opportunity to meaningfully access counsel and prevents asylum seekers from communicating with anyone else in the outside world, including people with whom they might consult regarding the credible fear interview. They also force asylum seekers to remain in crowded, unsanitary, and inhospitable conditions of confinement that are un conducive to meaningfully participating in a credible fear interview or other aspects of the credible fear process.

A. While ICE detention facilities provide for access to counsel, CBP facilities do not.

74. At ICE detention facilities, ICE standards require that the agency provide those in credible fear proceedings the opportunity to access counsel confidentially, both telephonically and in person. ICE detention centers generally provide telephones for access to legal representation and meeting spaces for attorneys to meet with clients and prospective clients.

75. ICE's Performance Based National Detention Standards ("PBNDS") specifically require that those in expedited removal proceedings shall have the opportunity to telephonically contact both counsel and prospective counsel. PBNDS 5.6(V)(E) (providing that ICE detention centers "shall" grant "[f]ull telephone access" in order for a detainee to contact "legal representatives"; "to obtain legal representation"; to access "legal services providers or organizations" on the provided list; and, specifically, "for consultation when subject to expedited removal" and requiring that "when a detainee is under an expedited removal order, his/her ability to contact pro bono legal representatives shall not be restricted" (emphasis added)). The PBNDS also bar "limit[ing] a detainee's attempt to obtain legal representation," beyond "reasonable restrictions" on call hours, time, and frequency. Id. 5.6(V)(F)(1); see also id. 5.6(II)(7) (“Detainees shall be able to make free calls to the ICE/ERO-provided list of free legal services providers for the purpose of obtaining initial legal representation.”).

76. The PBNDS also require ICE detention facilities to provide in-person attorney access. Attorneys must have physical access to ICE facilities, every single day, for at least eight hours a day during the work week and four hours a day on weekends and holidays. PBNDS 5.7(J)(2). The PBNDS requires that “each detainee may meet privately with current or prospective legal representatives and their legal assistants.” Id. 5.7(J)(1).

77. CBP facilities, by contrast, provide no meaningful opportunity to access counsel either telephonically or in person—whether confidentially or otherwise. Those detained in CBP custody are held essentially incommunicado, with no meaningful opportunity to communicate with the outside world.

78. CBP categorically denies attorneys in-person meetings with clients or prospective clients. CBP asserts that its facilities are not designed to allow attorneys to meet in person with detained noncitizens. CBP facilities do not have confidential attorney-client meeting areas, nor do they have any space dedicated to in-person visitation by attorneys or others.

79. Moreover, unlike for those in ICE custody, there is no way for attorneys to easily verify whether a client or prospective client is in CBP custody and, if so, where that individual is located. For ICE detainees, an attorney or other interested person may use ICE’s Online Detainee Locator System to look up an individual’s location of detention using the individual’s name, country of birth, and birthdate or alternatively name and A-number.⁹ There is no such system for CBP detainees.

80. CBP's national standards, unlike ICE's, contain no provisions guaranteeing telephonic or in-person communication with attorneys or others in the outside world.

B. Asylum seekers in PACR and HARP cannot meaningfully access counsel or otherwise communicate with the outside world.

81. Individuals subject to PACR and HARP are provided with effectively no telephonic communication with the outside world. Once a credible fear interview is scheduled, individuals are provided a single window of approximately 30 minutes to one hour in which to attempt to reach a family member or attorney by telephone.

82. Even for an asylum seeker able to reach an attorney by telephone, this single window is insufficient for meaningful communication and consultation with counsel during the credible fear process.

83. During the time in which asylum seekers may use the telephone, the conversation is not confidential. Agents monitor phone calls by standing within earshot outside the door.

84. Critically, there is no opportunity for asylum seekers to leave a call-back number or otherwise provide for their call to be returned. If an asylum seeker in the PACR or HARP program cannot reach a particular person or entity—or anyone at all—during the time frame provided for calls, they have no other opportunity to do so.

⁹ Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Online Detainee Locator System, <https://locator.ice.gov/odls/#/index>. An A-number is a unique registration number issued by USCIS to many noncitizens.

85. Like all CBP facilities, Border Patrol Station 1 in El Paso does not permit detainees to receive any visitors. There is therefore no opportunity for asylum seekers in the PACR and HARP programs to meet in person with anyone prior to or during their credible fear proceedings.

86. As described below, the individual Plaintiffs in this lawsuit had no meaningful opportunity to access counsel while in the PACR and HARP programs. Organizational Plaintiff Las Americas has been functionally unable to communicate with individuals in CBP detention with whom it wishes to consult and for whom it may wish to serve as counsel.

87. Moreover, the list of attorneys that detainees in the PACR and HARP programs have received is independently insufficient for any meaningful communication or consultation with prospective counsel. Detainees have called the list they are provided “the list of ghosts” because of their inability to contact any person by calling the numbers on the list. Although organizational Plaintiff Las Americas is on the ordinary list of free and low-fee attorneys provided by ICE to those with pending credible fear proceedings, it is not receiving calls from individuals in PACR and HARP based on the list that CBP provides. Other legal services providers report similar experiences.

88. Those detained in CBP facilities also generally lack the ability to communicate with family or friends. Frequently, the loved ones of CBP detainees do not know where they are or even that they have been detained. CBP has said that, for those in its custody, it has “no obligation to notify family or counsel.”¹⁰ For PACR and HARP, the only exception to this rule is the single brief window during which asylum seekers may make outside calls—and hope those whom they call answer the phone.

89. Accordingly, asylum seekers in PACR and HARP are unable to meaningfully access counsel or anyone else with whom they may wish to consult, despite express statutory and regulatory right to do so.

C. Access to counsel is critically important in the credible fear process.

90. Access to counsel is a critical protection for those in credible fear proceedings.

91. The interview and review can often require a detailed explanation from asylum seekers about extremely traumatic events and implicate complex legal determinations.

92. Asylum seekers have often traveled long distances and with children. They are frequently affected by mental health issues present in those fleeing violence, as well as by exhaustion and numerous other physical health challenges. At the same time, they are expected to immediately defend their rights during accelerated removal proceedings in which their lives and futures—and those of their children—are at stake.

93. The vast majority of asylum seekers, including the individual plaintiffs in this lawsuit, are fleeing serious violence or threats of serious violence or death. An attorney can assist an asylum seeker in preparing for their interview or review.

94. The ability to confidentially consult with a lawyer prior to the interview and review allows the asylum seeker to be better prepared to present all relevant information.

95. Attorneys are able to elicit information about why clients left their home countries and why they are afraid to return and to help determine whether a client's child may have separate or additional claims. Attorneys can also assist clients in presenting their full stories in chronological order and fully explaining why they are going to be harmed if they are returned.

96. Attorneys are also able to advise clients about the interview process, including that clients can ask for a question to be repeated or clarified, can advise that the interpreter is inadequate, and can say they do not know the answer to a question. Attorneys can also inform clients that their testimony will be recorded. This knowledge is especially critical for individuals who will need to be prepared to recount traumatic experiences during their interview.

97. Further, an attorney may review documents or evidence in person and help clients prepare to present corroborating evidence of their claims.

98. Meaningful and confidential communication with an attorney assists an asylum seeker in presenting all of the relevant information concerning their personal and traumatic experiences and in ensuring they understand the standard under which their fear will be judged, whether they may volunteer additional information, and what information may be relevant to volunteer.

99. The presence of the asylum seeker's attorney during the credible fear interview is also necessary for the attorney to understand what occurred during the interview and to best prepare their client for the immigration judge's review of any adverse determination by an asylum officer.

100. In an asylum seeker's preparation for review of a negative credible fear determination by an immigration judge, an attorney is able to help evaluate why the credible fear interview was unsuccessful, better develop the asylum seeker's claims, and prepare for the hearing before the immigration judge.

101. Case outcomes demonstrate that attorney access is essential for noncitizens in immigration proceedings. Detained noncitizens with representation in immigration proceedings are more than twice as likely to receive relief from removal as those without representation.¹¹

102. Attorney access has been particularly critical for asylum seekers in expedited removal. In 2014, advocates established a pro bono attorney project at a remote detention center in Artesia, ¹¹ Ingrid V. Eagly & Steven Shafer, A National Study of Access to Counsel in Immigration Court, 164 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1, 51 (2015).

New Mexico, which held Central American mothers and children seeking asylum and in expedited removal proceedings. After one month, removals decreased by 80%, and within two months, removals had decreased by 97%.¹² Likewise, a pro bono project at a detention center for families in expedited removal proceedings had, as of 2018, secured relief from expedited removal for more than 99.9% of those represented.¹³ And in 2018, after asylum seekers held incommunicado at a federal prison pending their credible fear interviews secured access to counsel via court order, all 74 represented between the issuance of the temporary restraining order and the issuance of the preliminary injunction were determined to have a credible or reasonable fear of persecution. Innovation Law Lab v. Nielsen, 342 F. Supp. 3d 1067, 1073-75 (D. Or. 2018).

IV. PACR and HARP Require Asylum Seekers to Remain in Conditions of Confinement Incompatible with a Meaningful Credible Fear Interview.

103. CBP's facilities are commonly called hieleras for their freezing temperatures and are notoriously inhumane.

104. These facilities were designed for "short term" detention and not to hold people through the full duration of credible fear proceedings.

105. Individuals are often detained in small, concrete cells with concrete or metal benches. CBP's internal guidance states that the cells are neither designed nor equipped for overnight sleeping. It specifies that such cells shall have "no beds."¹⁴

106. In many CBP facilities, including Border Patrol Station 1, the lights are left on all night.

107. CBP holding facilities do not include regular access to basic hygiene, including showers and the means for detainees to brush their teeth.

108. A May 2019 report by DHS's own inspector general detailed extreme overcrowding and horrible conditions of confinement at a CBP holding facilities in the El Paso area, including detaining single adults in standing-room-only conditions for a week and holding approximately 900 detainees at a facility with a capacity of 125.¹⁵

109. Individuals and families in credible fear proceedings in the PACR and HARP programs have been held in El Paso's Border Patrol Station 1. Many detainees there are held in tents where people sleep on mats on the floor. Others are held in freezing hielera cells, which lack even mats.

110. Detainees have reported to members of Congress severely deficient detention conditions at El Paso Station 1, including that detainees were told to drink from toilets; were forced to sleep in extremely cramped conditions; and were denied access to medication.¹⁶

111. Asylum seekers are frequently exhausted and often ill from their long journeys. Detention in CBP facilities that lack such basic necessities as beds and basic hygiene materials does not allow asylum seekers to recuperate prior to the credible fear interview.

112. These conditions inhibit asylum seekers' ability to accurately or fully recount traumatic past events.

113. The conditions of confinement in CBP facilities hinder asylum seekers' ability to meaningfully participate in their credible fear interviews and in the credible fear process more broadly.

V. Plaintiffs' Experiences Demonstrate that PACR and HARP Deny Asylum Seekers the Opportunity to Meaningfully Access the Credible Fear Process and Seek Protection.

A. Organizational Plaintiff Las Americas

114. Las Americas' experiences in attempting to represent asylum seekers in PACR and HARP demonstrate that it is impossible for such individuals to obtain meaningful access to counsel. Las Americas has been unable to communicate with prospective clients in PACR and HARP, whether telephonically or in person, prior to their credible fear interview or immigration judge review.

115. In light of the approximately 30-minute to 1-hour window that the PACR and HARP pilot programs provide for asylum seekers to contact counsel, Las Americas faces severe obstacles to directly connecting telephonically with any prospective client. One of Las Americas' attorneys must be on call and available in order to serve the prospective client immediately. This is especially burdensome because many of Las Americas' attorneys are frequently inside detention facilities providing legal representation. Moreover, PACR and HARP require Las Americas to have a staff member available to answer every single phone call before it goes to voicemail, since there is no means for the organization to call back an individual in one of the programs.

116. As a result, Las Americas has not yet received a phone call from an individual in PACR and HARP and has to date not been able to connect a person in PACR or HARP with an attorney in order to provide legal advice to the asylum seeker upon direct outreach.

117. Las Americas has been unable to meet in person with individuals in PACR and HARP. Las Americas' legal director requested an in-person meeting with a prospective client in PACR in order to conduct an intake. A Border Patrol officer informed her, “We are not equipped to facilitate in-person meetings.”

118. Historically, CBP has consistently denied Las Americas attorneys in-person access to CBP facilities, including El Paso’s Border Patrol Station 1. It has told Las Americas that it cannot accommodate attorneys at Border Patrol Station 1.

119. In contrast, most individuals that Las Americas represents in the El Paso area are in ICE detention at the El Paso Processing Center and other ICE facilities. After confirming the prospective client’s location through their assigned A-number in ICE’s online detainee locator, Las Americas is able to send an attorney or paralegal to meet with the individual. Locating an individual in ICE detention takes no more than a few minutes. The entire process of locating and meeting with the person to conduct a screening interview can typically take place in a single morning or afternoon.

120. Las Americas has been functionally unable to track down individuals in CBP custody in the PACR and HARP programs within the compressed time frame necessary to meaningfully communicate with them.

121. Instead, Las Americas staff have been forced to expend significant amounts of time attempting to track down prospective clients in CBP custody. In trying to find and then speak telephonically to one person detained in CBP custody and subject to PACR, Las Americas staff exchanged at least 18 emails and 4 phone calls with various CBP officials over a period of 2 days.

122. For this prospective client, Las Americas first contacted CBP via email around 10:19 AM on November 20, 2019, requesting access to the prospective client in PACR. A Border Patrol officer requested that Las Americas “send . . . a proposed date and time” for the conversation. At no point did the Border Patrol officer indicate where the prospective client was in the credible fear proceedings. The Las Americas legal director provided windows of availability for a telephone conversation that day and also requested an extension so that she could prepare her client. Border Patrol did not provide for a conversation that day.

123. The next day, November 21, at around 2:40 PM Border Patrol informed Las Americas that it “ha[d] not confirmed their [the prospective client’s] location yet” and asked that Las Americas double check the spelling of her name. At roughly 4:59 PM on November 21, Border Patrol confirmed that it had located the prospective client “at the El Paso Station”—over 30 hours after Las Americas first sought to locate her.

124. On the following day, November 22, at around 2:48 PM, Border Patrol informed Las Americas that the prospective client had in fact gone through the immigration judge review process sometime on November 20. The immigration judge had already affirmed the adverse credible fear determination and had ordered Las Americas’ prospective client removed.

125. Las Americas has to date been unable to connect with any individual in PACR or HARP prior to the completion of their credible fear proceedings. In contrast, Las Americas regularly connects with and represents individuals in ICE custody in their credible fear proceedings, including prior to the credible fear interview itself.

B. Individual Plaintiffs A.R.R.D. and her son, L.E.R.D.

126. A.R.R.D. fled El Salvador with her now seven-month-old son, L.E.R.D., to seek asylum in the United States. Gang members have repeatedly extorted A.R.R.D. and threatened her life and the life of her son.

127. In 2015, A.R.R.D. owned a small restaurant where she sold Mexican food. She worked for the city during the day and at the restaurant at night.

128. One day that year, gang members arrived at her house. A man knocked on her door and then passed her a phone. The person on the phone said that he was calling from jail and represented the 18th Street gang. He started yelling obscenities at A.R.R.D. and told her that if she did not pay the gang 1,000 U.S. dollars they would kill her family members one by one so that she could see how they died, and then they would kill her.

129. A.R.R.D. ended up selling the chairs and other supplies from her restaurant to pay the gang the money and then was forced to close her restaurant and go work for the city full time.

130. In early September 2019, two members of the same gang that threatened A.R.R.D. in 2015 returned to her house. They knocked and slammed at the door until she opened it. When she opened it, she had her baby, L.E.R.D., in her arms. The gang members said they were from the 18th Street gang and that A.R.R.D had one week to give them 3,000 U.S. dollars. They pointed a gun at her child's head, and said if she did not pay, they would kill A.R.R.D. and her baby.

131. That night, A.R.R.D. grabbed her wallet and left the house with her son. She left so quickly that she did not even bring a spare change of clothes.

132. The next day, A.R.R.D. went to the police to file a complaint. The police officer who took her statement told her that she should flee the country with her son because the gang would kill her if she could not pay and the police could do nothing. Following that conversation, A.R.R.D. fled with L.E.R.D. While traveling to the U.S border to seek asylum, L.E.R.D.'s grandmother texted A.R.R.D. to inform her that the gang members were looking everywhere for her, saying they would kill her if they found her.

133. On or about October 8, 2019, A.R.R.D and L.E.R.D. crossed the Rio Grande into the United States near El Paso. They were looking for Border Patrol in order to seek asylum. They were apprehended by Border Patrol that same day and taken to a CBP facility.

134. A.R.R.D. and L.E.R.D. were placed in a cold cell that other detainees called a hielera.

135. On or about October 9, 2019, A.R.R.D. was taken to a room by Border Patrol agents and was shown a video in Spanish. The video explained that A.R.R.D. was going to be given something called a credible fear interview in the next 24 hours, but A.R.R.D. did not understand the video.

136. On or about October 11, 2019, A.R.R.D. and L.E.R.D. were taken to a room and given a phone and a list of names with phone numbers. The agent who escorted them to the room told A.R.R.D. that she had 30 minutes to call her family members or one of the attorneys on the list. Although she tried calling several of the attorneys, no one answered. A.R.R.D. had no way to leave a message or to receive a call back. She then called her sister-in-law, and they spoke for approximately 10 minutes. During the entirety of A.R.R.D.'s time in CBP custody, she had no other opportunity to use a telephone, and she did not hear from her sister-in-law again. For the rest of her time in CBP custody, she repeatedly asked Border Patrol agents for access to a phone to call her family, but they always refused any other access.

137. On or about October 13, 2019, A.R.R.D. had her credible fear interview. She was very confused throughout the interview.

138. On or about October 14, 2019, a Border Patrol agent informed A.R.R.D. that she had not passed the interview and that she could request a review of that determination by an immigration judge.

139. On or about October 15, 2019, A.R.R.D. was taken into a room in the facility to speak with an immigration judge by phone. She was again confused by the process. At the end of the ten-minute interview, the immigration judge explained that she had failed the interview and that she would soon be removed. A.R.R.D. never received further notification as to the immigration judge's final decision on her case.

140. On or about October 17, 2019, Border Patrol agents took her into a room in the facility and told her to sign some documents in English. Although she signed the papers, she does not know what they were.

141. During the time that A.R.R.D. was held in detention, she and L.E.R.D. had to sleep on the floor. At no time was she able to speak with an attorney about her asylum case.

142. DHS removed A.R.R.D. and her son to El Salvador on or around October 21, 2019.

143. A.R.R.D. and her son are currently in hiding in a small town in El Salvador. She is afraid to disclose her location because gang members are looking for her and her family. A.R.R.D. and L.E.R.D. remain indoors at all times. A.R.R.D. has not left the house since being removed, not even to take L.E.R.D. to a doctor. She is afraid for her life and L.E.R.D.'s life while they remain in El Salvador.

C. Individual Plaintiffs A.S.C.R., K.M.V., and F.B.G.C.

144. In late September 2019, A.S.C.R., her husband K.M.V., and their now 14-month-old daughter F.B.G.C. fled El Salvador to seek asylum in the United States. The family had received multiple death threats from gang members.

145. In El Salvador, K.M.V. worked for a trucking company and was often out of the country.

146. In late August 2019, two gang members showed up at the family's door. They both started knocking on the door—very aggressively. One of the men said that they knew A.S.C.R. was alone with her children and that her husband was out of town. They demanded a 3,000 U.S. dollar payment to the gang, and said that if A.S.C.R. did not pay that she and her children would end up in body bags.

147. A.S.C.R. and her family tried to flee to a different municipality where her mother lived, but there a gang member approached K.M.V. and told him that if he did not leave, there would be consequences.

148. The family then tried to report the gang threats to the police, but the police said they should flee the country if they could because the gangs would not stop pursuing them. They fled the next day.

149. On or about October 8, 2019, A.S.C.R., K.M.V., and F.B.G.C. crossed the Rio Grande into the United States near El Paso. They were looking for Border Patrol in order to seek asylum. They were apprehended by Border Patrol that same day and taken to a CBP facility.

150. After approximately a day in CBP detention, A.S.C.R., K.M.V., and F.B.G.C. were taken to a room with other detainees and showed a video. The video explained that they would receive a credible fear interview to determine if they could apply for asylum. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. found the video confusing and did not understand the process.

151. Two days later, on or about October 10, 2019, CBP agents took the family out of the cells in which they were detained. The agents put them in a small room with a wireless phone and a list of names and phone numbers for, the agents said, lawyers. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. were told they had 30 minutes to make calls. The door to the room was open, and the agents were just outside. The list had around 15 names on it, and the couple do not remember seeing any organizations on the list.

152. Before they were given the 30 minutes to make phone calls, A.S.C.R. had spoken with other asylum seekers in her cell who went through the same experience. They told her that they had called many names on the list but that no one had ever answered. Because of that, her cellmates referred to the list as “the list of ghosts.”

153. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. tried calling two names on the list, but no one answered. Because they only had 30 minutes remaining and had been told that no one ever answered from that list, they used the rest of the time to call A.S.C.R.'s sister-in-law. A.S.C.R. was able to speak with her sister-in-law for approximately 10 minutes. She told her that she was currently under arrest by CBP.

154. After that 30-minute window, A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. were given no other opportunity to use a telephone during the credible fear screening process. They did not hear from A.S.C.R.'s sister-in-law again for the remaining time they were detained by CBP.

155. On or around the following day, October 11, 2019, A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. had their interview with an asylum officer. They found the interview to be very confusing. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. did not feel like they had a reasonable opportunity to prepare for the interview because they had no understanding of what it would be like.

156. On or about October 16, 2019, A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. were informed that they had not passed the fear interview. They requested review of the decision by an immigration judge. A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. were not given another opportunity to contact counsel or family members before the review by the immigration judge.

157. On or around October 18, 2019, after an approximately five-minute telephonic hearing in which only K.M.V. was able to speak, an immigration judge denied their appeal. A CBP agent then informed A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. that there was no way to appeal that decision and that they would be removed.

158. Over the approximately 20 days that the family was in CBP custody, their young daughter F.B.G.C. barely ate. She could only consume breast milk, and A.S.C.R. was too weak to produce enough to feed her. F.B.G.C. also exhibited signs of illness: she had a consistent fever and was very red. A.S.C.R. thought F.B.G.C. would die if they were forced to remain in CBP detention any longer. A.S.C.R. felt they had to get out of CBP custody, no matter what, to save her daughter's life.

159. A few days later, CBP agents told A.S.C.R. and K.M.V. that the immigration judge had officially upheld the negative finding from their interview and they would be deported soon. On or about October 28, 2019, A.S.C.R., K.M.V., and F.B.G.C. were removed to El Salvador.

160. Since being sent back to El Salvador, the family has been in hiding, along with A.R.R.D. and her son, in a different part of the country from their previous home. They cannot leave the house or otherwise go out in public, because they know the gang can identify them and harm or kill them. They are brought food by relatives, but they will not set foot outside of the house for fear of risking their lives and the lives of their children.

D. Individual Plaintiffs B.G.R., D.M.F.G., B.C.F.G., J.M.F.G., and S.F.G.

161. In late September 2019, Plaintiffs B.G.R., her husband, and her children D.M.F.G., B.C.F.G., J.M.F.G., and S.F.G., who are 8, 7, 5, and 2 respectively, fled Michoacán, Mexico after B.G.R.'s father was disappeared and the family received numerous threats to their lives.

162. In Michoacán, B.G.R.'s husband had a small business selling shoes and clothing. B.G.R. cared for the children at home.

163. Her father owned a small ranch with horses and other animals. In July 2019, he was on his way to his ranch when he was disappeared by cartel members. B.G.R. has not seen her father since.

164. Soon after her father disappeared, a member of a drug cartel called B.G.R. and asked her for 500,000 Mexican pesos (about $25,000) in exchange for her father. B.G.R. asked for proof that her father was alive but never received an answer. She has not seen her father again.

165. On or about September 15, 2019, a cartel member called B.G.R.'s husband and told him that they had to pay the cartel 4,000 Mexican pesos (about $200) a month in order to continue operating their business. They told her husband that if they did not pay the cartel they would kill B.G.R. and her family.

166. On or about September 20, 2019, cartel members called B.G.R.'s husband again and told him that the family had to pay up. If they did not, the cartel said, they would kill B.G.R. and her children. They also told B.G.R.'s husband that the family should forget about B.G.R.'s father, because he was gone and would never come back.

167. They told her husband specifically where their children went to school, where they lived, and what areas they tended to frequent.

168. B.G.R. also noticed that strange men with guns had begun following her around town.

169. After this call, B.G.R. and her husband became very scared and decided to flee Mexico. They did not place a report with the police because it is well known that the cartel controls the police. They have seen cartel members threaten people and the police then arrest those persons who were threatened. Those persons are then either disappeared or murdered.

170. On or about September 26, 2019, B.G.R. and her family arrived in Ciudad Juárez, Mexico. They went straight to the Cordova International Bridge in order to cross into the United States and request asylum. CBP agents initially refused them entry to the United States. They were then placed on a list of Mexican asylum seekers. Accordingly, they lived in a tent encampment at the base of the bridge for almost two months while waiting on the list.

171. On November 20, 2019, B.G.R. and her family were allowed to cross into the United States to request asylum. They were taken to a CBP facility, where B.G.R. and her children were separated from her husband. B.G.R. does not know why they were separated. She has not seen her husband since they were separated.

172. A few hours after they arrived at the CBP facility, two men entered the room with B.G.R. and identified themselves as officers. They asked B.G.R. questions about why she and her children were seeking asylum. When B.G.R. explained her story, the officers laughed at her and accused her of lying. They said her father was not dead and was probably lying in bed next to her mother. The men also asked for evidence, and so B.G.R. gave them the police report from her father's disappearance.

173. A few hours later that day, B.G.R. and her children were taken into another room with computers. A guard in a blue uniform asked them questions and input the answers into a computer. He asked them where they were from and why they were fleeing and requested information about the people they were fleeing from. That questioning lasted approximately 30 minutes.

174. That night, B.G.R. and her children slept on the floor of a room on top of a mattress with a very thin blanket.

175. The next day they were transferred to another CBP facility. B.G.R. and her children were placed in a small cell inside the building. B.G.R. overheard a guard tell another detainee that they were staying in a hielera.

176. In the hieleras, B.G.R. and her children slept on the floor. They were not given a mattress.

177. On or about November 21, 2019, a guard came and took B.G.R. and her children into a room that had a desk with two chairs and a wireless phone. The guard told B.G.R. that she had one hour and that this was her opportunity to call family. He also handed her a list of names and phone numbers and told her it was a list of attorneys she could call. B.G.R. tried calling her family members, but no one answered. She also tried calling some of the names on the list, but no one answered.

178. On or about November 22, 2019, the guards came and removed everyone else from the hielera, except for B.G.R. and her children. She was then handed a wireless phone over which she had her asylum interview. B.G.R. was not prepared for the interview, nor did she understand the purpose of the interview.

179. While in CBP custody, S.F.G.—B.G.R.’s youngest child—had developed a fever. He was taken to a doctor in the CBP facility. The doctor said there was nothing wrong with him and refused to give him any medicine. Another of B.G.R.’s children refused to eat while detained.

180. The day after the asylum interview, a guard came into the room. He did not speak Spanish. Instead, he used his cell phone to translate. The guard told B.G.R. that she had failed her interview and failed to qualify to stay in the United States. He asked B.G.R. if she wanted to appeal that decision but stated that if she did so she and her children would stay in detention until the resolution of the case. Under the guard’s pressure and fearing for her children’s health, she did not appeal the decision. The guard handed her some documents in English to sign, but she does not know what they were and did not get a copy.

181. On or about November 24, B.G.R. and her children were moved to the tent area of El Paso Station 1, where they slept on a mattress on the floor. B.G.R. asked to try to call her family, but she was told that she could not make calls from that facility.

182. On or about November 29, B.G.R. and her children were removed back to Ciudad Juárez, Mexico.

183. After their removal, B.G.R. received a call from her husband, who is currently detained in an ICE facility in New Mexico.

184. B.G.R. and her children are currently sleeping in the tent encampment at the base of the Cordova International Bridge. They do not know where to go or what to do. B.G.R. is afraid for her life and the lives of her children.

185. While B.G.R. was detained, she did not speak with an attorney or with any family member outside the CBP facility.

VI. PACR and HARP Erroneously Return Asylum Seekers, Including the Individual Plaintiffs, to Places Where They Face Potential Harm.

186. PACR and HARP set asylum seekers up for failure in the credible fear process—no matter how strong their claims for protection. By forcing asylum seekers to proceed through the credible fear process while essentially incommunicado in CBP custody, without access to counsel, in conditions that otherwise significantly interfere with their ability to have a meaningful credible fear interview, and on a rushed timeline, PACR and HARP result in the erroneous removal of people who are at risk of persecution, torture, and death.

187. PACR and HARP deprived the individual Plaintiffs of a meaningful opportunity to access counsel and to consult with family members and, therefore, to meaningfully access protections for relief from removal. The individual Plaintiffs have been removed to the countries from which they fled, and they face significant danger to their lives while they remain there.

188. PACR and HARP also have kept organizational Plaintiff Las Americas from accessing prospective clients in the credible fear process. Las Americas has sought to make contact with prospective clients in PACR and HARP without success.

189. If PACR and HARP remain in place, people who have claims for asylum or other forms of relief and protection that require that they be placed in full immigration proceedings will be erroneously sent back to danger, persecution, or even death.

190. Congress specifically implemented procedural safeguards to prevent this kind of erroneous deprivation of the right to apply for asylum, in requiring that individuals in the credible fear process have access to counsel to ensure a meaningful opportunity to seek relief. With PACR and HARP, the executive branch is attempting to effectuate an end run around the procedural safeguard of access to counsel, by implementing policies that are not in accordance with the duly enacted law of the United States, with the executive branch's own regulations, and with the fundamental goals of the asylum system: protecting those at risk of persecution or torture, and ensuring that all those who may be eligible for protection have a full day in court.

VII. PACR and HARP Harm Organizational Plaintiff Las Americas.

191. PACR and HARP have disrupted Las Americas' operations in the El Paso area and forced the organization to divert resources to attempt to provide legal and other assistance to asylum seekers in CBP detention. In doing so, they have greatly impaired Las Americas' ability to represent asylum seekers detained in the El Paso area—which is critical to Las Americas' mission. These harms are exacerbated every day that PACR and HARP remain in effect.

192. Las Americas seeks to provide direct legal services to individuals in PACR and HARP due to its long history of responding to urgent direct services needs for noncitizens in West Texas. If Las Americas is able to connect with individuals in PACR and HARP, it will seek to provide legal services to those individuals. Las Americas has attempted to connect with such individuals in order to provide legal services and has been unable to do so.

193. In response to the extraordinarily narrow windows of time that individuals in PACR and HARP have to speak with an attorney, Las Americas has re-trained its intake staff to attempt to identify and elevate calls from or on behalf of individuals in PACR and HARP—for example, calls in which the individual expresses a particularly urgent need to speak with an attorney or a third party says they are unable to further contact an individual in immigration proceedings. Las Americas intake staff has created a separate tracker for calls from individuals who are in either PACR or HARP and now attempts to immediately contact an attorney while the caller is still on the line. Las Americas will now staff a separate phone line with a dedicated legal assistant in order to free up a line solely for the purpose of providing representation to asylum seekers in the PACR and HARP programs.

194. PACR and HARP require Las Americas' director of legal services to divert time from Las Americas' docket working with individuals detained in ICE custody in anticipation of possible calls from asylum seekers in PACR and HARP. The director of legal services now is on call, ready to respond within hours to prepare those asylum seekers for the interview and to otherwise engage with asylum seekers in the credible fear process. From November 20, 2019 to December 3, 2019, Las Americas' director of legal services devoted approximately 60% of her time to attempting to locate and consult with individuals in PACR and HARP. The time that the legal services director has expended attempting to locate prospective clients in PACR and HARP is time that she has not devoted to supervising attorneys, working on behalf of asylum seekers, preparing for upcoming litigation on behalf of asylum seekers, and doing additional advocacy work regarding detention conditions at ICE facilities where her clients are detained.

195. In an attempt to account for the obstacles to access imposed by PACR and HARP, Las Americas sent a paralegal to Ciudad Juárez, Mexico to screen and sign up for representation

Mexican asylum seekers who could be subject to the HARP program. CBP has not been able to locate the five clients signed up through this method in their systems.

196. As a result of CBP's failure to provide timely information concerning and access to clients and potential clients, Las Americas is implementing plans to conduct CFI and RFI preparations in Ciudad Juárez. Pro bono counsel often assist Las Americas in providing CFI and RFI preparation and representation for clients detained in ICE custody. However, pro bono counsel are significantly less likely to cross into Mexico to assist in these efforts. Las Americas therefore will be forced to extend resources beyond those required in similar cases where clients are in the United States or in ICE custody.

197. If PACR and HARP continue, Las Americas will be forced to hire additional staff. Las Americas will divert funds that it would have put into communications as well as previously planned staff raises designed to encourage retention. Hiring the additional staff member will result in additional costs, in terms of time invested in the hiring process and time invested in onboarding and training. If PACR and HARP continue and Las Americas were to choose not to hire an additional staff member, it would need to decrease its representation for adult detainees in other settings—scaling back its representation in bond, parole, and full asylum proceedings—due to resource constraints.

198. Las Americas is working to develop a rapid response intake system for detained individuals that includes rapid intakes, preparation for the credible fear interview, and the ability to engage in full asylum legal representation. It has a grant contingent on this work to serve detained adults in ICE custody. Las Americas will have to work to attempt to rearrange the grant if PACR and HARP continue.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

199. All of the foregoing allegations are incorporated by reference in each of the following claims.

FIRST CLAIM

(Violation of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv))

200. The Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv), provides that a noncitizen in credible fear proceedings within the expedited removal process “may consult with a person or persons of [their] choosing prior to” a credible fear “interview or any review thereof, according to regulations prescribed by the Attorney General.”

201. Defendants’ PACR and HARP programs and their implementation violate 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv) by preventing individuals from accessing counsel or otherwise consulting with individuals of their choosing during the credible fear process.

SECOND CLAIM

(Violation of 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4))

202. Federal regulations governing credible fear proceedings for those in expedited removal provide that a noncitizen “may consult with a person or persons of [their] choosing prior to” a credible fear “interview or any review thereof.” 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4). Under the regulation, “Any person or persons with whom the alien chooses to consult may be present at the interview and may be permitted, in the discretion of the asylum officer, to present a statement at the end of the interview.” Id.

203. Defendants’ PACR and HARP programs and their implementation violate 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4) by preventing individuals from accessing counsel or otherwise consulting with individuals of their choosing during the credible fear process. Defendants’ acts also violate 8

C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4) by preventing counsel and other individuals that asylum seekers choose to consult from being present at the credible fear interview.

THIRD CLAIM

(Violation of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1362; Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 555(b))

204. The Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1362, provides that “[i]n any removal proceedings before an immigration judge,” the individual “shall have the privilege of being represented (at no expense to the Government) by such counsel, authorized to practice in such proceedings, as he shall choose.”

205. The Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 555(b), provides that “[a] person compelled to appear in person before an agency or representative thereof is entitled to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel or, if permitted by the agency, by other qualified representative. A party is entitled to appear in person or by or with counsel or other duly qualified representative in an agency proceeding.” Individuals subject to expedited removal procedures are compelled to appear in person before agency representatives. Congress has not exempted expedited removal proceedings from the procedural protections provided in § 555(b).

206. Defendants’ PACR and HARP programs and their implementation violate 8 U.S.C. § 1362 and 5 U.S.C. § 555(b) by preventing individuals from accessing counsel during the credible fear process, including in the credible fear interview itself.

FOURTH CLAIM

(Violation of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706(2))

207. The Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, provides that a Court “shall hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions” that are “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” and “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right.”

208. The PACR and HARP programs are arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, and contrary to law. Among other reasons, the programs are arbitrary and capricious because they entirely failed to consider important aspects of the problem, including that the programs deny asylum seekers the ability to consult with counsel and other persons of their own choosing and to have those representatives present at the credible fear interviews and immigration judge review and that the programs do not take into account the effect of the conditions of confinement in CBP facilities on asylum seekers’ credible fear interviews; the programs depart from prior policies without acknowledgment of or a reasoned explanation for the departure; and the programs are illogical and irrational. The programs are also contrary to law allowing asylum seekers to consult with persons of their own choosing, including counsel, prior to credible fear interviews and to review by an immigration judge and to have those individuals present at credible fear interviews.

FIFTH CLAIM

(Violation of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the Convention Against Torture, the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998, and Implementing Regulations)

209. The Immigration and Nationality Act and implementing regulations, including 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1), 8 C.F.R. §§ 235.3(b)(4), 208.30, and 1003.42 (expedited removal); 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (asylum); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3) (withholding of removal); and CAT, implemented in the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (“FARRA”), Pub. L. No. 105-277, div. G, Title XXII, § 2242, 112 Stat. 2681, 2681-822 (1998) (codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1231 note) entitle individuals to a meaningful opportunity to apply for asylum, withholding of removal, and CAT relief, as well as numerous procedural safeguards in connection with those applications.

Defendants, through their implementation of the PACR and HARP programs, have violated these statutory and regulatory rights in multiple respects, including by:

- a. Effectively denying a meaningful opportunity to consult with and be assisted by attorneys or others prior to and during the credible fear process and the immigration judge review process, and to have attorneys or others present at the credible fear interview; and
- b. Maintaining conditions that hinder the ability to meaningfully participate in credible fear proceedings, including the credible fear interview.

SIXTH CLAIM

(Violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution)

210. The Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that “[n]o person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law.”

211. The individual Plaintiffs and other asylum seekers have protected interests in applying for asylum, withholding of removal, and CAT relief, in obtaining withholding of removal and CAT relief upon a showing that meets the applicable standards, and in not being removed to a country where they face serious danger and potential loss of life.

212. The individual Plaintiffs and other asylum seekers are entitled under the Due Process Clause to a fair hearing as to their eligibility for asylum and other relief from removal, including at a minimum a procedure that is in compliance with applicable statutory and regulatory standards.

213. Defendants, through their implementation of HARP and PACR, have violated the Individual Plaintiffs’ and other asylum seekers’ rights to due process, including by:

- a. Effectively denying a meaningful opportunity to consult with and be assisted by attorneys or others prior to and during the credible fear process and the immigration judge review process, and to have attorneys or others present at the credible fear interview; and
- b. Effectively denying a meaningful opportunity to apply for asylum, withholding of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3), and relief from removal under CAT.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court grant the following relief:

1. Declare Defendants' policies requiring that individuals and families remain in CBP custody for the duration of their credible fear proceedings and the actions and practices of Defendants described above contrary to law;
2. Enter an order vacating the programs keeping individuals and families in CBP custody for the duration of their credible fear proceedings, including but not limited to all written policies and guidance issued by DHS and DOJ regarding PACR and HARP;
3. Enter an order permanently enjoining Defendants and their directors, officers, agents, and employees from continuing to apply the new programs to individuals and families who are placed in credible fear proceedings;
4. Enter an order vacating the expedited removal orders issued to each of the individual Plaintiffs;
5. Enter an order enjoining Defendants to provide each of the individual Plaintiffs with a new credible fear process or, in the alternative, full immigration court removal proceedings pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1229a; to return Plaintiffs to the United States at no expense to

Plaintiffs; and to parole Plaintiffs into the United States for the duration of those credible fear and/or removal proceedings;

6. Enter an order staying the credible fear proceedings of persons currently subject to PACR and HARP in the El Paso sector until they have been either paroled or transferred to ICE custody and have had an adequate opportunity to access counsel; and, for those who have already received an adverse determination in a credible fear interview, vacating any negative finding and/or removal order and enjoining Defendants from removing them until they have been provided with a new credible fear process fully compliant with law or, in the alternative, full immigration court removal proceedings pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1229a;
7. Enter an order enjoining Defendants to provide those previously subject to PACR and HARP with a new credible fear process fully compliant with law or, in the alternative, full immigration court removal proceedings pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1229a; to return them to the United States at no expense; and to parole them into the United States for the duration of those credible fear and/or removal proceedings;
8. Award Plaintiffs' counsel reasonable attorneys' fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act, and any other applicable statute or regulation; and
9. Grant such further relief as the Court deems just, equitable, and appropriate.
